

CHAPTER IV

CONCLUSION

Based on the discussion, the analysis finds a conclusion of Sociopathic behavior reflected by Frank Sheeran in the movie The Irishman (2019). From the analysis, the sociopathic behavior depicted in the movie is portrayed in the journey of Frank Sheeran in the Buffalino crime family. The analysis finds the indication that Frank Sheeran's sociopathic behavior starts after he starts his job as a crime family's hitman. Frank is an ex-military, union truck driver from America. He lives day by day as a Union truck driver until he is caught smuggling his cargo to the local mafia. Being saved from prison by the mafia makes him indebted to them, and Frank starts to be given a job by the mafia. After getting involved with the mafia, Frank's sociopathic characteristic begins to show. Frank's sociopath tendency is also nurtured by Russel Buffalino, his boss in the mafia. Starting his life in the mafia, Russel eventually entangles Frank with criminal activities.

The analysis of Frank Sheeran's sociopath personality is conducted by using the theory of the American Psychiatric Association's antisocial personality behavior theory. In the analysis of the seven characteristics of a sociopath, Frank received this personality trait from his crime family. Accepting the job given by the crime family makes his sense of morality decrease, and eventually, he tries to justify the crime that he has committed in the name of serving his crime family. Frank eventually gets caught by the law enforcer and has to stay in prison for what he has already done. In the prison, he does not feel any remorse due to his sociopathic behavior, as he sees that everything he has done is for the right cause. His social condition is also impacted by his behavior, especially his family. Frank eventually grows more ruthless and self-centered as he accepts his sociopath personality. This personality shift causes his family to become scared of him and try to move away from his life. At his old age, Frank is feared by his own family and left to live alone, his children left without communicating with him. By the end, Frank's life is a victim of his sociopath personality, ending his life empty and nullifying all of the achievements that he has produced. Frank chooses to live with his sociopathic behavior to the end of his life.
