

ABSTRACT

Globalization makes the boundary between states slowly disappears. It advantages multilateral economic cooperation made by states. The ex Uni Soviet States: Russia, Belarus and Kazakhstan formed regional trade organization called Eurasian Economic Union. This organization integrates its members' economic policy. Eurasian Economic Union also allows free movement of goods, services, labour and capitals between its members. The writer uses the normative juridical method. The data are obtained from secondary data. The research is analyzed qualitatively and presented descriptively. The result of this research discusses Eurasian Economic Union from international organization law perspective, starts from the creation process, Eurasian Economic Union structure, membership, the obligations of each member states, decision making process, and dispute settlement process. This research also discusses about how Eurasian Economic Union cooperates with other international law subjects, including how is the Eurasian Economic Union relates to World Trade Organization.

Keywords: Eurasian Economic Union, Regional Trade Organization, Economic Integration Agreement, International Organization Law