ABSTRACT

One of the social programs dealing with the problem of prostitution in Indonesia takes the form of rehabilitation for sex workers or former sex workers to return to normal functioning in society and improve their quality of life. Early adults who pursue rehabilitation need awareness to actively develop all their potential and discipline in implementing the rehabilitation program. The purpose of this study is to understand the description of psychological experiences in early adults who are undergoing social rehabilitation. The participants of this study amounted to three people with the following criteria: early adults (20–30 years old), former sex workers, and people currently undergoing social rehabilitation at Harapan Mulia Social Protection Center (PSPBK). The data collection method used was the semi-structured interview method and was analyzed by the descriptive analysis method. There are eleven essential themes found in the research, namely: (1) demands of conditions and needs; (2) negative feelings; (3) negative self-esteem; (4) openness to undergoing rehabilitation; (5) admission of guilt; (6) obeying the rules; (7) self-control; (8) desire to grow; (9) getting a deterrent effect; (10) self-development; and (11) future job expectations. The results of this study show that early adults who undergo rehabilitation experience an increase in awareness and much better self-esteem.
