

CHAPTER IV

CONCLUSION

The Hate You Give movie directed by George Tillman Jr. expresses racism towards black people. The main characters in the movie, Starr, fight for racism she got from the white society especially white dominantly court. She also fights against racism in order to avoid stereotypes. It is difficult for her because she has been threatened with death, harassed, and oppressed. However, she finally successfully managed it because she has grit behavior that leads her into it. Starr gritty behavior also leads her to show her black pride in front of public.

Racism in this film is very clearly portrayed, especially from a law perspective. The law in this film is very cruel to black people like Starr, Khalil, and Starr's family. Khalil, who was shot without being proven guilty by the white police, did not get justice from the side of the law. The white police who shot Khalil was only given a light sanction, which was being suspended from duty and did not receive a proper punishment.

Furthermore, we still often see racial discrimination happen in our world now days. People often discriminate others who are different from them without being understand that those people are also have their own uniqueness. Apart from that, discrimination on court still continuously to happen especially for minority. The minority often receives unequal treatment from the law, because it seems create to only protect the majority.
