

CHAPTER 4

CONCLUSION

In conclusion, alcohol is inherently bad. However, this does not mean that consuming alcohol is prohibited, as long as it is within the specified dosage. As said by Dr. Benjamin Rush said that alcoholics will find it difficult to escape from alcohol itself and will not feel the freedom they want, so this must be avoided. Alcohol can be a form of escape in American social life because it is often found in American social life itself. American society cannot be separated from alcohol, so alcohol consumption when problems occur always increases, making it the fastest form of escape. According to "When a Man Loves a Woman" (1994), sufferers who are addicted to alcohol find it difficult to get rid of this addiction because they already know the "crazy" effects of alcohol; This is similar to how drug addicts find it difficult to get away from illegal drugs. The treatment she underwent was also not easy, making Alice feel tormented when she did not drink alcohol. Apart from that, you also need to know that what Alice did was wrong when she was angry with Michael for no apparent reason. Michael, who thought that he understood Alice well enough, actually caused the two of them to have a big fight so that their two daughters became victims due to their parents' actions. Mutual understanding and clear communication are things that support good relationships. Another thing that is worth noting is Michael's patience when accompanying Alice, even though there is still real resistance on Michael's part. In the end the two were able to reconcile. This movie not only shows the struggle of an alcoholic to recover, but also provides real examples of married life.
